Introduction

Traditional teaching methods, with teachers in front of a blackboard giving long hours of lectures do not “work” with today’s students and certainly will not work with the students of tomorrow. By using ICT (Information and Communication Technologies) the teacher’s role is being transformed from a traditional profession to an intermediate supporter towards the facilitation of the students to conquer knowledge (Kalogiannakis 2010). King(1993).

Active learning is defined as the process of engaging students in activities in such a way that they are supported to reflect upon idea sand how these ideas are being executed (Michael 2006). We
