Concept note :

The world of academia has gone through some major changes over the years. While earlier knowledge gain was the be all and end all of the academic process, the scene has changed today. Apart from the possession of knowledge, both teachers and students are expected to master the art of conversation. In the era of globalization, developing communication skills in English is the need of the hour. It does not matter which discipline one belongs to, possessing the skills of communication is imperative. Sadly, however, communication skills are being limited to the functional skill of communication. This only leads to the knowledge of survival English not the English for 'communicative competence'. On the other hand, writing is slowly gaining attention in the academic sphere. It is no longer being believed that writing is the province of English teachers and students alone. Everyone should be able to write well. Also, today writing is not only about "the mundane simplicities of the mercantile prose." An engineer ought to be able to write as skillfully. This FDP series will discuss how and why we should possess the two wardrobes: Communication and Writing.

About the Program: One Week FDP on Possessing the two wardrobes: Communication and Writing was an online FDP organized by BVRIT Hyderabad. It aimed to provide how and why we should possess the two wardrobes : communication and writing.

Communication and writing, two fundamental skills of language, serve as essential wardrobes for effective expression and interaction. Effective communication encompasses both verbal and nonverbal cues, enabling us to convey ideas, emotions, and intentions with clarity and impact. Writing, on the other hand, provides a structured and permanent medium for our thoughts, allowing us to organize, refine, and share our ideas with a wider audience. Together, these two skills equip us with the power to connect with others, navigate the world around us, and shape our understanding of ourselves and society.
