THEME OF THE ONLINE FDP

English Language Education (ELE): Teaching, Resources, and Evaluation

The teaching of English, like other disciplines, is undergoing an unprecedented paradigm shift today owing majorly to the COVID-19 pandemic. The new scenario poses several challenges to teachers and students. In this context, there is a need to ensure that skills of the English language are imparted to all students sufficiently so as to enable them to acquire 'communicative competence'. This has propelled the English teaching fraternity to newer frontiers of online language teaching, assessment, and evaluation.

A thorough rethinking of the role of teachers as facilitators and collaborators in the teaching-learning process, well equipped with the requisite motivation, knowledge, social sensitivity, skills, strategies, and techniques enabling students to acquire 'communicative competence' can be fulfilled. At the same time, online assessment and evaluation of the communication competence of students and teachers have become two defining criteria, especially in the last one year.

This FDP will highlight the latest trends in the practice of ELT, its related research and also consider the manifold aspects of the problems, paradoxes inherent in teaching language competencies and the connection between teaching and research as is practiced in engineering colleges today. The programme will also emphasize very pertinent themes such as material production, evaluation strategies, tools, publishing papers, and other related matters.

SUB-THEMES:

1. New perspectives on Communicative competence: Revisiting the role of teachers and students in globally challenging times.
2. Learner autonomy and its aspects.
3. Enhancing creativity and critical thinking.
4. Soft skills and Persuasion techniques.
5. Blended learning: The need of the hour.
6. Research: Stairway to individual success and national progress.
7. Use of 'Realia': Materials for offline and online teaching.
8. Learning Strategies.
9. The new idiom of language use on social media.
10. Translanguaging in the English Classroom.
11. Conventional and non-conventional modes of testing.
12. Deconstructionism in contemporary novels and texts.
13. Contemporary literary research and dynamics of academic publishing.
